

Icelandic writer and poet

Steinunn Ásmundsdóttir

Steinunn Ásmundsdóttir writer and poet was born in 1966 in Reykjavik, Iceland. The years between 1984 and 1996 were mostly dedicated to writing poetry, journalism, nature conservation/rangering and globetrotting.

She moved to East Iceland in 1996 to be closer to nature, founded a family and lived in the east for over twenty years. In East Iceland she worked as a journalist and photographer for the newspaper Morgunblaðið (www.mbl.is) for a decade and as an editor of the Austurglugginn (www.austurfrett.is) local weekly newspaper & web for several years. In this period she didn't write but very little else than news, interviews and commentators.

In 2011 she decided to put the brakes down; jump of the busy life 'hamster-wheel' and aim for a life that could be more introvert and observant, and to focus on writing her own literature again.

In 2016 Steinunn established her own literature and publication website; www.yrkir.is. Yrkir (e. compose) includes over two hundred poems dated from 1986 till now, translations of her poetry mainly in english and spanish, as well as stories, articles, interviews and reflections.

Since 2017, four books by Steinunni have been published, three books of poetry, 2017, 2018, 2019, and one novel, 2018. Three books of poetry were published earlier, 1989, 1992 & 1996.

She is currently writing a novel that will hopefully be published in 2021.

Steinunn now lives in Reykjavík, works as a proofreader besides her writing and is the proud mother of two wonderful young people.

Steinunn is a member of The Writers' Union of Iceland (www.rsi.is) since 1992, and Le Droit Humain www.ledroithumain.is since 2015.
